

Onwards and upwards

'Tis once again almost year-end and time to review the tumultuous past months that saw more than a few

Added bricks to the wall of worry and stress that have maintained the ongoing investor duress.

In January, there was hope the pandemic damage was past with the reopening of China to make global growth fast.

The upward momentum, however, skewed inflation risks higher which was not quite the bias central bankers desired.

But as hopes of a “pivot” on interest rates turned some regional banks saw their balance sheets burned,

Bringing bad memories of past crises back to the fore which, in turn, sent investors running out through the door.

The rapid quelling of risks here merely paused the assault
because next came concerns of a US default

As a fiscal impasse left Washington reeling because of the (totally arbitrary) debt ceiling.

That calamity, once again, was thankfully averted
but focus then shifted to the curve that was deeply inverted

And its omen was bolstered as China's growth faltered further suggesting growth's trajectory soon would be altered.

Despite all of this, though, and the resulting bad humours,
the economy held up thanks to resilient consumers

Whose spending ensured that order books didn't run dry while markets rallied on the buoyant prospects for AI.

Through it all, though, rates hit peaks not seen since the aughts as central banks argued inflation still needed to be fought.

Lest we forget Charlie Munger, unvarnished and clever,
his musings and comments will live forever.

2023 PERSPECTIVES DECEMBER

And last on the docket, but surely not the least geopolitical tensions have erupted, this time in the Middle East.

So, uncertainty and risk remain the name of the game which means the outlook may well see much more of the same

But with a well-thought-out plan and an advisor you trust you can have faith that your wealth at least won't go bust.

And you can instead focus on things filled with cheer, happy holidays to all and wishing the best for the New Year!

Equity markets are volatile and will increase and decrease in response to economic, political, regulatory and other developments. Investments in foreign securities involve certain risks that differ from the risks of investing in domestic securities. Adverse political, economic, social or other conditions in a foreign country may make the stocks of that country difficult or impossible to sell. It is more difficult to obtain reliable information about some foreign securities. The costs of investing in some foreign markets may be higher than investing in domestic markets. Investments in foreign securities also are subject to currency fluctuations. The risks and potential rewards are usually greater for small companies and companies located in emerging markets. Bond markets and fixed-income securities are sensitive to interest rate movements. Inflation, credit and default risks are also associated with fixed income securities. Diversification may not protect against market risk, and loss of principal may result. This commentary is provided for educational purposes only.
